Personal Reference for Alexander Parks

To Whom it May Concern:

It is my pleasure to provide a personal reference for Alex, someone who I have known for over 10 years.

I have been involved in activities where Alex has participated in sports as well as watched him work as an official in those sporting activities. In general, I have been able to observe Alex as he matured from a High School student to an Engineering Graduate.

Alex is an open and thoughtful individual. He participates in activities that he is involved with in a focused and deliberate way, always ensuring he understands the task at hand and asking for feedback on how to be better as he carries it out.

He is always considering potential options that can improve things and I have experienced that Alex has a very inquisitive mind, generally looking for cause and effect relationships in a way to suggest or try ways to make things better.

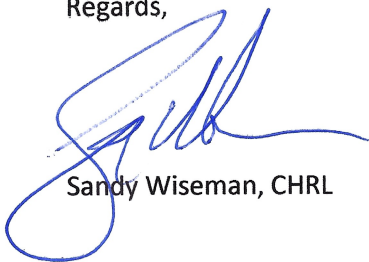

Alex's curiosity has always been a strong feature of his. When I learned that Alex was pursuing engineering it came as no surprise to me as it seemed a logical path for someone with his level of curiosity and analytical thinking.

In general, Alex is thoughtful, kind and easy to get along with. I have always observed him as someone who fits easily and quickly into groups. His sincere nature quickly endears him to the people around him.

Any organization looking to add someone who is thoughtful, analytical, driven by possibilities while at the same time being socially adept and a good team player would be well served to consider Alex. I would consider him an asset to any team.
